TEN10 WRC CHAMPIONSHIP

BACK TO MONTE MAGIC

The challenging Monte Carlo Rally opens the Ten10 season once again, bringing with it the infamous mix of icy mountain passes and twisty tarmac roads that have made it a true test of skill for drivers.

Motsky

The Ten10 season opener lived up to its brutal reputation - tricky, unforgiving, and absolutely electric from start to finish. Narrow, winding mountain roads demanded total focus, leaving no room for error as drivers navigated a treacherous blend of ice, slush, and dry tarmac. Tire choice once again became a roulette wheel, but many leaned on their hard-earned Season 1 experience to make smarter calls this time around. Three night stages only raised the stakes, with darkness amplifying every patch of black ice and sudden drop in grip. Service breaks - just 45 minutes every three stages - remained a tight squeeze, forcing teams to make hard decisions on what to fix and what to leave hanging by a thread. Unsurprisingly, the retirements piled up. The mountains claimed a few victims, though many managed to claw their way back into the rally on the following day thanks to the restart rules. Monte Carlo hasn't changed: it's still one of the hardest rallies on the calendar, and once again, it delivered drama by the bucketload.

THE KING IS BACK

Azazel couldn't have asked for a better statement to kick off Season 2. With a commanding drive ► in Monte Carlo, the reigning Season 1 champion reminded everyone exactly why he wears the crown - smooth, consistent, and utterly in control on some of the most unforgiving roads.

“The rally had some fierce competition”, Azazel admitted after the win, “but I’m pleased with both my performance, as well as the team’s”. While the early stages saw a tight battle with Bship - “only to be outdone by a few seconds every stage” - Azazel’s true strength emerged in the second half of the rally. Methodically, he widened the gap, eyes shifting from the split times ahead to the looming threats behind: “By the end, I was making sure to extend my lead, looking over my shoulder at Toasty and Rider”.

“I am fully expecting to win both championships”

We usually say that a calculated control and ability to adapt under pressure separates champions from challengers. And this season, Azazel is setting the bar even higher: “I am fully expecting to win both championships”. With Rider now by his side, and the return of Verguld to the Bahamut Racing lineup, the team looks more dangerous than ever - cohesive, experienced, and laser-focused.

Still, the competition is anything but soft. “My former teammates are surely adding to the competition”, he noted, with a nod to Toasty - now leading his own squad - and Lil Jacob, who snatched the Power Stage win with an explosive drive “out of nowhere”.

But for now, the message is clear: the champ isn’t done. Far from it. The king is back - and he’s here to defend his throne.

ONE STAGE AT A TIME

After a rocky debut season filled with frustration, few had Stenzel on their shortlist of podium contenders heading into the opening round of Season 2. The treacherous mix of ice, snow, and narrow tarmac seemed an unlikely place for a breakthrough. And yet, that’s exactly what happened. In a rally that punishes the smallest mistakes and leaves no room for error, Stenzel delivered a composed, calculated drive that earned him a surprise - but well-deserved - third place finish. It was a dramatic turnaround on the very rally that had haunted him the year before, and a clear statement that he’s back, better, ► and far more dangerous. “Monte Carlo was the bane of my existence last season”, Stenzel admitted. “I struggled over the ice-covered bends and cliffs that litter that godforsaken rally.” This time, however, things were different - thanks to a fresh approach and some unorthodox adjustments. Chief among them ? Swapping out a seasoned co-driver for his neighbor, whose only demands are a paid bar tab and simplified pacenotes using just “easy”, “medium”, and “hard”.

The result ? A more composed and consistent drive. “I also drove slower and more cautious... like I was going to get groceries instead of racing”, he joked. But beneath the humor is a clear evolution in his rallying mindset - one that might just make him a serious contender this season.

Whether this is Stenzel's peak or just the beginning of a resurgence remains to be seen. But for now, one thing is clear: he's not to be underestimated.

SLIPPERY SLIDE

After setting an electric pace early in the rally, all eyes were on Rider to deliver a statement result.

Fast, precise, and seemingly in control, Rider looked well ahead of the field, going through the treacherous alpine roads with confidence. But as it often goes in the unforgiving world of rallying, it only takes one moment - and one patch of ice - to bring it all crashing down.

“It was fun racing on the [...] beautiful snow-covered mountains of Monte Carlo. Well ahead of the pace”, Rider recounted. That pace came to a sudden end on a deceptively tight Left 2 corner, where a thin sheet of ice locked up the brakes and sent the car off the edge of a cliff. A dramatic exit, symbolic of Monte Carlo's harsh reputation.

Despite the crash, Rider's raw speed allowed him to come in 7th place overall.

TEN10 MOTORSPORTS LEAGUE

M2 THE MOON

Moonday Night Racing is back for Season 2 - new cars, new tracks, and the same fierce Moonday night energy. The multiclass madness returns to SimGrid, this time running the Porsche 992 cup car and BMW M2 CS.

Stenzel

Ten10 Motorsport's Moonday Night Multiclass returns for a second season on SimGrid, bringing back its premier Assetto Corsa Competizione league with fresh cars, iconic circuits, and fierce competition. It's going to be bigger, bolder, and faster : enough to whet any appetite.

Last season saw Azazel dominate the GT3 field with clinical precision, while Rider and Stenzel rounded out the podium with strong performances of their own. In the GT4 class, Toasty emerged victorious ahead of Dino and Verguld in a tightly contested championship. From Valencia to Kyalami, the action was fierce, the racing relentless, and the Monday night vibes absolutely unmatched.

This time around, it's a showdown between the razor-sharp Porsche 992 Cup Car and the ever-agile BMW M2 CS. The competition promises to be more intense than ever, with every lap demanding mastery, from corner exits to pit strategy. Tracks across the season will serve as battlegrounds where drivers must combine raw pace, race craft, and clever timing to pull ahead of the pack.

Whether you're chasing redemption, looking to defend your title, or just hungry for a wheel-to-wheel thrill, this is the season to prove it. Get ready to reignite your racing spirit and redefine what it means to chase the checkered flag - under the glow of Moonday night.

Season 2 kicks off May 12 at 8:00 PM EST. Join the grid and sign up now: SimGrid Championship Page ■

SIM RACING CLUB ENDURANCE

SPA, TAKE TWO

After a dramatic false start marred by server issues, the Sim Racing Club's 24 Hours of Spa will return on May 17-18 as a full re-run. Ten10's Ferrari 296 GT3 is back on the grid, with Dino, Kip, Motsky, and Ace ready to fight for glory.

Motsky

The Sim Racing Club's 24 Hours of Spa was meant to be a celebration of endurance, teamwork, and competition at the highest virtual level. Instead, it became a victim of unfortunate technical setbacks. Severe server instability forced the race to be red-flagged and postponed, leaving teams and drivers frustrated and eager for a second chance.

Among them, Ten10 had entered the event with high hopes, fielding a formidable Ferrari 296 GT3 under the banner "Puff Puff Passed You". The squad showed immense potential before the shutdown: Sam stormed from P21 to P9 in just 20 minutes, and Rider delivered a heroic 4 hours solo stint amidst the chaos. These performances proved that Ten10 wasn't just here to compete - they were there to win.

Now, the Spa 24H will return on May 17-18. A full re-run means a new qualifying session will be held in the week prior. While not all original team members are able to rejoin the grid this time around, Ten10 will still be represented by Dino, Kip, Motsky, and Ace - each ready to push themselves to the limit.

With redemption in sight, Ten10 is once again focused on a strong finish. Spa promises to be a race of attrition and grit, but if Take 1 was any indication, this team has everything it takes to do well. ■
